Thematic guide: sexuality studies (using qualitative data)

Issues of sexual identity, intimate citizenship, same-sex relationships and marriages...
Introduction

Before the study of sexualities emerged as a topic of sociological interest in the late 1960s, it was given relatively little attention by sociologists, as it was simply viewed as an intrinsic and biological aspect of human behaviour.

However recent theories and perspectives on sexualities have come to include issues of sexual identity, intimate citizenship, same-sex relationships and marriages, HIV/AIDS, queer theory and gender role formation.

The UK Data Service qualitative collections on the theme of sexualities include a wide range of such issues and feature studies such as:

- Smart and Mason's 'Gay and Lesbian 'Marriage': an Exploration of the Meanings and Significance of Legitimating Same Sex Relationships' which explored the socio-legal, cultural and familial meanings and significance of lesbian and gay 'marriage' and civil partnerships.
- Hockey, Robinson and Meah's study 'Cross-Generational Investigation of the Making of Heterosexual Relationships' which looks at heterosexual relationships and how these are experienced subjectively.
- Donovan and Hester's 'Comparing Love and Domestic Violence in Heterosexual and Same Sex Relationships' which explored the scope of domestic violence in same sex relationships.

Summary of selected qualitative studies on sexualities

Study name
SN 6332 Comparing Love and Domestic Violence in Heterosexual and Same Sex Relationships, 2005-2006
Donovan, C. and Hester, M.

This study sought to increase knowledge, understanding and scope of domestic violence in same sex relationships via the first comprehensive national community survey to identify similarities and differences between the experiences of those in same sex and heterosexual relationships. The qualitative interviews focused on 'best' and 'worst' relationship experience including questions on how they met, love, decision making, and domestic violence.

Coverage
Sample: people aged 16-65 who had experienced a same sex relationship in the UK; people aged 18-65 who had experienced same sex/heterosexual relationships in the UK

Data: 800 quantitative; 59 qualitative interviews; self-completion survey; email survey.

Topics
- family life
- gender roles
- same sex relationships
- domestic violence

Study name
SN 5900 Gay and Lesbian 'Marriage': an Exploration of the Meanings and Significance of Legitimating Same Sex Relationships, 2003-2006
Smart, C. and Mason, J.

This study explored the area of lesbian and gay 'marriage' and civil partnerships. It examined the socio-legal, cultural and familial meanings and significance for lesbians and gay men of seeking public or formal recognition of relationships. It looked at the ceremonies couples hold, who they invite, and whether they follow conventions such as the exchange of rings or whether they adopt radically different styles of ceremony.

Coverage
Sample: same sex couples living in England between 2004 and 2005 held/holding commitment ceremony/partnership registration

Data: 54 face-to-face interviews: 37 couples; 17 individuals.
Topics
- same-sex relationships
- commitment ceremonies
- financial and legal issues

Study name
SN 6109 Market for Migrant Domestic and Sex Workers, 2002-2006
O’Connell Davidson, J. and Anderson, B.

This study explored attitudes towards, and experience of, the markets for migrant and sex workers in the UK and Spain. It examined continuities and discontinuities between domestic work and sex work, paying particular attention to broader attitudes towards race, gender, age and sexuality. Some of the main topics of the study included the reasons for employing domestic workers, attitudes towards employment relations with domestic workers, and experience of commercial sex.

Coverage
Sample: People with experience of buying commercial sexual services. Control sample: employers of domestic workers; students; tourists.

Data: 446 quantitative; 68 qualitative interviews; self-completion survey.

Topics
- domestic workers
- commercial sex
- sexuality
- migrant sex workers

Study name
Hockey, J., Robinson, V. and Meah, A.

Making intimacy and the practices of everyday life its core focus, this study asked how women and men manage and subjectively experience the institution of heterosexuality. The study used a life course perspective to investigate the processes through which women and men have identified and constituted themselves as 'heterosexual' at various points across the last 80 years.

Coverage
Sample: extended families with three generations of adults aged 15+ based in Northern England.

Data: 54 face-to-face interviews

Topics
- sexual knowledge
- courtship
- weddings
- parenthood
• separation and divorce

Study name

Hockey J.

This study investigated ways in which men negotiate their masculine identity as they pass between work and home contexts, and how this changes as men manage transitions in their lives. The research took masculinity as a fluid, contested notion, and explored the ways in which multiple masculinities played out in individuals’ lives.

Coverage

Sample: male hairdressers, fire-fighters or estate agents and a female partner, wife, girlfriend, family member or friend based in North England.

Data: 110 face-to-face interviews

Topics

• masculinity
• identity
• transition
• work
