Thematic guide: youth culture studies (using qualitative data)

Youth groups started influencing music, television and cinema
The study of youth culture saw a rapid expansion in the second half of the twentieth century as an increasing number of youth groups started influencing music, television and cinema.

Economic and social changes, such as increasing numbers of young people with growing financial means, played a big part in favourably influencing this emerging trend and pushing the various youth groups into mainstream culture.

Early studies often perceived youth culture as the study of 'trouble-makers' and young people who rebelled against societal norms.

As youth culture gradually entered the mainstream, the sociological study of youth shifted to the examination of young people's subjective experiences in contemporary society, as well as to the use of these accounts to inform changes in social life.

Studies such as Lloyd and Dittmar's examination of boys and girls' concerns with body image, along with Riley, Griffin and Morey's study on dance culture, are good examples of this latter trend in the social research of youth culture.

Summary of selected qualitative studies on youth culture studies

Study name

This project focused on three overlapping spheres of restructuring in family life: those operating in labour markets, urban housing markets, and gender relations. The project explored the way 'two wage' families draw on local labour, housing, transport, and childcare solutions to cope with everyday life. Other issues explored were varying prosperity and growth, family structure, social dislocation, home and work dislocation.

Coverage
Sample: two-parent families with young children and at least one economically active partner, resident in Great Britain or the USA between 1996 and 2001

Data: 85 interviews

Topics
- household
- employment
- childcare
- housing
- relationships
- social networks
• transport

Study name
SN 5028 Quality of Home Experience for Homeworkers, 2002

This study examined the ways in which home is conceptualised, experienced and evaluated by homeworkers, a hard-to-reach group. It explored the impact of home working on the experience of home and family life and sought to identify ways in which working from home may challenge the traditional stereotypical view of home.

Coverage
Sample: homeworkers: worked more than 20 hours, did not live alone, resident in the North of England and South Wales Data: 45 qualitative interviewees, 15 focus group interviewees, 62 quantitative respondents

Topics
• homeworking
• home life
• leisure time activities
• local neighbourhood

Study name
SN 2000 Family Life and Work Experience Before 1918, 1870-1973

The major part of this collection comprises life story interviews originally collected as part of the study The Edwardians: Family Life and Work Experience Before 1918. The interviews were undertaken in the early 1970s and formed the basis of the first national oral history project in the United Kingdom.

Coverage
Sample: men and women born between 1870 and 1908
Data: 449 interview transcripts (PDF format) and 444 quantitative cases

Topics
• age
• birth order
• childbirth
• community
• families
• marriage

Study name
Hockey, J.

Making intimacy and the practices of everyday life its core focus, this study asked how women and men manage and subjectively experience the institution of heterosexuality. The study used a life course perspective to investigate the processes through which women and men have identified themselves as 'heterosexual' at various points across the last 80 years.

Coverage
Sample: extended families with three generations of adults aged 15+ based in Northern England
Data: 54 face-to-face interviews

Topics
- sexual knowledge
- courtship
- weddings
- parenthood
- separation and divorce

Study name
SN 4723 Family Life of Old People, 1865-1955.

Townsend, P.

This material formed the basis for Professor Townsend’s classic 1954-1955 study which examined the growing perception that a breakdown in extended family networks was leaving old people isolated, and creating an increasing demand for residential care. The project demonstrated the important role that kinship networks, and relations within the extended family, played in the maintenance of community membership.

Coverage
Sample: elderly men and women in Bethnal Green, Hampstead and Westminster, London
Data: 189 interviews, diaries (in PDF format)

Topics
- old age
- family life
- welfare services
- community life
- retirement
- poverty
- social isolation

Study name
SN 5100 Transition out of the Parental Home in Britain, Spain and Norway, 2001-2002

Hollway, W.
There is considerable diversity in young people's experiences of leaving home throughout Europe, with young people leaving home at much older ages in the south rather than the north. This research project explored the relative importance of factors such as access to higher education, labour and housing market conditions and culturally-defined norms on leaving home in three European countries: Britain, Spain and Norway.

Coverage
Sample: young people and their parents in Liverpool, Bilbao and Trondheim

Data: Interviews - Liverpool: 34, Bilbao: 34, Trondheim: 24

Topics
- domestic responsibility
- family life
- leaving home
- parents
- siblings
